Hubi is a program of the Stanford Autism Clinical and Translational Research Center (SACTRC), which aims to facilitate a better understanding of the patient's perspective by providing a platform for the open dissemination of personal health narratives on the Internet. In addition to the resources that Hubi has already offered to the scientific community, this project will develop the community to be receptive to the mentorship provided by SACTRC, develop Hubi's educational content, and incorporate model and best practices from two large and successful popular media sites (wikiforums and youtube). The candidate for this Mentored Clinical Scientist Award is an adult with autism, Jason Cook, who has been profiled for the public, now as a guide for other families to learn from. Jason's Autism Narrative for the public is documented on Youtube, and his blog documenting his progress is maintained on drupal.org. In addition to the mentoring from the SACTRC and an expert external collaborator, Jason will be connected through his blog with other individuals with autism, parents, caregivers, and the general public. Jason's objective is to develop a comprehensive public-facing persona for educating the community about his Autism Story. He will be working with Albert Gazmararian, Ph.D., who will mentor him in the development of his plan and will assist him with the development of his plan and execution of it. Jason will be provided the mentor's expertise in the development and execution of a public outreach plan. Outreach will vehicles, ambulances, golf carts, lifts, farm tractors, commercial vehicles.. This is also the reason why the one-time-hitpoint f-key is of a particular importance in the game; a player may win without using a f-key, but using the f-key they can claim a minimum time of execution. From the point of view of Nintendo, one-time-hitpoint f-key is responsible for the game's sandbox gameplay and the tradition of continuous game play with a checkpoint reached by a player from the restart point. The f-key is not used for restarting a game, but can be pressed repeatedly to continue a game. Gameplay-wise, one-time-hitpoint f-key is intended to "replace the all-important standard-hitpoint f-key", which would be used for saving the game. Nevertheless, the one-time-hitpoint f-key has been criticized, because it makes a player incapable of winning without using the key. The one-time-hitpoint f-key is certainly an effective tool for a game that is meant to be played for a certain period of time without Discovery of an anti-melanogenic mechanism for the inhibition of melanogenesis by the traditional Chinese medicine Andrographis paniculata. Andrographis paniculata, a traditional medicinal herb of China, has been used to treat some melanogenic disorders. We have demonstrated that the use of A. paniculata extract inhibits melanogenesis in B16 melanoma cells and in the human melanocyte-melanoma cell hybrid P1G. This indicates that A. paniculata may have potential in the prevention and treatment of melanogenic disorders. In this study, we reported that A. paniculata could inhibit melanogenesis by inhibiting tyrosinase activity and tyrosinase expression.

placental perfusion]. The objective of this study was to examine whether the impedance flow pulsatility index (IFPI) using Doppler sonography is an useful tool for the detection of an obstructive fetal growth restriction in the second half of pregnancy. In a prospective study, IFPI was measured in 27 patients with either one growth restricted fetus or two growth restricted fetuses in the second half of pregnancy. The reference range was established using 12 normotrophic pregnancies at or before 36 weeks of gestation. Evaluation included IFPI in the uterine artery, umbilical artery and the mean IFPI of these two vessels. In the second half of pregnancy, the mean IFPI of the uterine artery correlated significantly with the mean IFPI of the umbilical artery ( $r = 0.46$ )
