* A portable, economical, integrated solution for detecting and blocking intruder and vulnerab... Whether you want to trick a cheating spouse or just get your ex back, there are hundreds of ways to do so. But, there are more than a few things you can do to secure yourself from such cheating scenarios. It's vital to ensure that the devices used in our homes are properly secured. Here are a few tips for securing your mobile devices, networks, and other electronics in your home. Add passwords to all of your Wi-Fi devices. This is an easy solution to your password woes, as well as an easy way to secure yourself from other users who may be coming into your home. If you don't want a password on your Wi-Fi network, be sure that you have a strong password. Also, allow users on your Wi-Fi to have to enter their credentials when accessing your network. This way, anyone who wants to use the Internet will have to enter your password. Use WPA encryption on your Wi-Fi. WPA encryption is extremely strong and can protect you from prying eyes. It's also easy to set up, and only takes a few steps to set up. Create an encrypted memory stick or an encrypted external hard drive. These devices are hidden from other users and require special software to access. When you use an encrypted device, you should be able to easily wipe it and keep the contents private. When traveling, use a high-quality mobile device that has a strong password. Always turn the wireless password off on your device when not in use. If you're on a public network, you may want to turn on the "airplane mode" to prevent people from accessing your phone. When using public Wi-Fi, be sure to regularly check your data usage. Be sure to use data when you're moving, and turn it off when you're done using the connection. Be sure to turn off all of your mobile devices when you're done using them. For example, keep your phone on airplane mode or turn off the screen if you are using a tablet. Don't share your Wi-Fi password. If you do share this information, it will be incredibly easy for your neighbor to connect to your network and start using it. Start a conversation with children and grandchildren about the dangers of sharing their passwords. They may hesitate to share their Wi-Fi password because of all of the dangers involved. If you've been cheated on or have lost a
