Quorum sensing in Gram-positive bacteria. Gram-positive bacteria are divided into two groups based on their cell wall structure. While the majority of gram-positive bacteria use peptidoglycan as their cell wall, others have either a lipoteichoic acid or lipopolysaccharide cell wall. Both types of cell wall contribute to defining bacterial shape and determining its size. As a protective barrier, these walls are not readily accessible to antibiotics, indicating that gram-positive bacteria have developed various strategies to overcome antibiotics. One of these strategies is quorum sensing (QS), which is the process by which bacteria
